Easter goes Orthodox in East County

by Steven Saint

Highland Avenue was dark minutes before midnight as the group began assembling on the sidewalk and in the street. It was not a particularly Greek-looking crowd. There were lots of blondes and at least one black woman standing among the more typical Mediterranean stock.

Everyone looked great in their soon-to-be Sunday best

Two priests emerged from the small wooden church building and joined another man and two boys in robes on the porch overlooking the group. One lit a large candle and spoke to the people without benefit of microphone. They were all here to celebrate the Risen Christ, he said, and led St. Gregory of Nyssa Greek Orthodox Church in a somber song. One of the altar boys brought a flaming taper from the large candle and began lighting the candles held by people in the

Soon there was a glowing field of flames and the incantation grew louder and bolder. Across the street, two men who seemed to be drinking emerged from the trees near Lexington and shuffled slowly toward the group. The people repeated the down and from side to side.

Just as the two men made it across Highland, the song was over and the group began to head toward the wooden steps, following the priests up and into the church.

"Sing another one. You gonna sing another song?" called out the man in a baseball cap. "Keep singing! Keep up the music!"

The group ignored them but one man, busy folding up chairs and clearing the street, turned to ushers in Easter at midnight.

The Divine Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom has been celebrated by the Orthodox Church every Sunday for 16 centuries, but it's always different after midnight. The late hour produces a calm fatigue that sharpens the mysterious assault of incense and chanting. The icons seem just a bit more otherworldly and the droning liturgy shifts unexpectedly in and out of slow motion.

A week after the rest of the world celebrated Easter, some 300 million Orthodox Christians gathered at the stroke of midnight on April 14 to welcome the Risen

Inside the little church it was standing room only. The Divine Liturgy pulsed forward, half in English, half in Greek. No musical instruments. The small entryway was busy, people going in and out to talk or grab a cigarette. Sleepy kids tried to find a comfortable position on the floor of the cloak room.

In a community of some 70 families, the stranger is noticed immediately and welcomed by

The culmination of the service is the Eucharist. The consecrated bread (leavened, cubed, not flat wafers) is submerged in the wine and carried in procession around the church. The Orthodox (alone are invited to receive, and the priest spoons a piece of the winesoaked bread directly from the chalice into the mouth of the member. Unconsecrated bread and wine is distributed freely.

It was close to 2 a.m. when the liturgy ended. Father James Gavrilos introduced his associate, an Antiochean Orthodox priest from Northern California, who in turn introduced his wife, two children and four teenagers. The congregation was dismissed and invited to take red Easter eggs and their 18-inch tapers home.

Everyone was invited to return for Easter morning liturgy at noon and a Paschal picnic at Santee Lakes afterward

Highland Avenue was returned once again to its darkness and quiet. Still, whispers carried across the crisp morning air. He is risen indeed.

Grossmont program named best in California

The California Community College Association for Occupational Education named Grossmont College's Office Professional Training (OPT) program the "Outstanding Grant Funded Vocational Program" last week.

OPT students enroll in one of three semester-long certificate programs designed to meet the employment needs of San Diego County. For 16 weeks, participants are trained to work as computerized office assistants, skilled account clerks or skilled insurance clerks

Prior to the start of the 22-unit college credit semester, students take a two-week preparation course consisting of refresher math, English, speech and life skills components. OPT participants also work an internship while taking coursework.

"OPT is very intensive," said Dr. Mary Leslie, lead OPT instructor. "The usual semester course load is 12 to 15 units. Our students take a higher course load in addition to their worksite internship. When they graduate, they are ready to go to work and keep working."

Participants of the federally funded program are low-income adults who are long-term unemployed or laid-off workers. Many are single parents, often victims of abuse and sometimes homeless.

Upon graduation, they receive job placement assistance and work in jobs paying an average starting wage of $7.50 to $8 per hour for a minimum of 30 hours per week.

An extensive network of support services has been developed to keep participants on the success track. Basic needs are met with the help of Crisis House, the Employment Development Department, GAIN, the Department of Social Services, Indian Health Services, the Career Development Center and Community Connection. College faculty and staff donate business clothing

OPT has served almost 2,000 students over the last 11 years. It has a 90-percent job-placement success rate even during times of economic recession. Funding is through the Job Partnership Training Act administered by the San Diego Consortium/Private Industry Council. Additional funding sources have been investigated this year due to a 65 percent budget cut, Leslie said.

Personal comments from Mayor Bob Burns

Filling the Council vacancy

This is an opinion from one who will have absolutely no power in the matter, as I will officially be history when the action is taken. However, in light of what has happened, I am inclined to give my view. It involves the replacement of the person who sits on the council in the seat vacated by Mary's moving to the center of the dais. There are but two ways by which this will happen. One would be to hold a special election to fill the seat. The other is for the four remaining council persons to agree upon an appointment to fill out the term, which in this case is two more years.

The present situation has occurred twice before, but for different reasons such as a resignation and a death. The first time, the appointment was made in selecting an also-ran from the previous council election, but not the first runner-up as I recall. The second time, the appointment was made by selecting the person who failed to win by 13 votes, and it was a single and unanimous vote of the council. In either case it was wisely chosen as opposed to a costly special election.

We have just completed a Council election and the first ever elected mayor ballot measure. As is typical, the people have made their voices very clear in the selection of a mayor and a councilperson. Also typical is that the blizzard of political signs that covered our city, are all gone as required by our ordinance. Congratulations, one and all on that...

Now comes the question again, shall we hold a special election or can the council agree on an appointed replacement? I would certainly hope, and assume, that the costly election choice would not be made This leaves the appointment process. In some cities, this situation has evolved into a mild to acrimonious hassle in attempting to get a friend, or swing voter, on the five member governing board. Neighboring cities have been known to go through many, many ballots before a stalemate can be broken and a majority decision made.

From my perspective, of the two methods that Lemon Grove used in replacement of a council seat, the choice of the first runner up of a previous election was the best decision. It was certainly more popular with the general public of our town, and was unanimous on the first ballot. His very decisive victory in securing the seat at the subsequent election, was a very positive referendum of that choice. It demonstrated clearly that the voters of Lemon Grove approved of that appoint-

Now we have a vacant chair and we have a first runner-up in our present council race. He is Ranger Dick Whitmore and he decisively won second place on the ballot just held. Ranger Dick has had the fortitude to run for the office before and was not discouraged by failure in the past. He is a gentleman, a family man, and a person who loves our little community. His career as a Park Ranger and his work with children, would seem to me to bring the type of personality and vigor that we need. He was decidedly the people's choice for council in the recent election, and it would also seem to me that such a choice should

Petty politics, and coalition building should not be the prime reasons for making such a selection. The peoples will, and what is best for the community, should be first and always. The right of the people to make the choice for mayor was a long time coming, and is finally allowing them to make that decision. The appointment of a council replacement should well be the same.

The track's 11:00 curfew resulted in the Sportsman Stocks race being given the checkered flag five laps short of its scheduled 30-lap duration, but Johnson earned a fourth-place finish behind Gary Tamborelli, Mike Mendenhall, and Bruce Bechtel.

Johnson, who grew up in El Cajon and was a seven-time national motocross champion prior to retiring from that sport and entering a form of racing more suitable for a 31-year-old, spent 1995 at the Cajon Speedway. In a points championship not decided ntil the final race of the season, Johnson edged Jerry Gay and Mike Mendenhall for the class'

Johnson rented a residence in Charlotte in February, but his wife and three small children remained in North County. Johnson surprised his wife for Easter by returning to the San Diego area.

Dole's tax reforms are anti-family

by Joe Naiman

I gave my ex-wife primary custody of my children because I work and I'd rather have my children raised by a parent than by a day-care worker.

While I feel that the amount of my child support payments is excessive. I don't mind paying to have the children raised by an actual parent.

When Paula and I were divorced, the divorce decree stated that I could claim the children as dependents. This seemed fair to me, since I was paying for them.

The IRS thinks differently. A state divorce court edict has no influence over the federal government, and the tax law presumes that the parent with physical custody has the right to claim the children as dependents unless the custodial parent waives those rights by signing a Form 8322.

Prior to 1986, the parent who was paying for most of the child's expenses, which means the parent who was paying child support if there was one, was entitled to take the child as a dependent. Following the 1986 tax reform, the prima facie right was changed to the parent with physical custody.

This is Bob Dole's tax reform. Bob Dole changed the right to claim the dependent from the parent who is paying for the children to the parent who has custody.

The custodial parent gets both the child support payments and the deduction for a dependent, while the non-custodial parent pays child support and gets neither a deduction for child support payments nor the right to claim the child for whom he is paying as a dependent.

This means that, unless one's former spouse - from whom one has just been divorced - signs the Form 8322, the cost of putting the interest of one's children ahead of oneself has gone up. It becomes more expensive to give up custody of the children for their benefit, thus increasing the likelihood of maintaining custody while placing the children in a day care

Bob Dole's tax reform policy has reduced the chance that a child will be raised by at least one parent. Bob Dole has created an anti-child tax code for America.

Furthermore, the change in presumption has gone from splitting custody and the right to claim a dependent to giving one parent both custody and the right to claim a dependent while forcing the other parent to pay child support without the prima facie right to claim that child as a dependent.

The stakes have been raised in child custody battles, and since the stakes have been raised parents are more likely to be bitter towards each other.

The child not only has to endure a broken home, but also the animosity between the parents caused by the higher-stakes battle over the financial ramifications of Bob Dole's tax policy is harmful to families, especially to children of divorced families. If the American public wanted a President who hates children, W.C. Fields would have resided in the White House.
